Come along to our Spring show and hear about the Tea Bag Challenge!

The Tea Bag Index is a novel method to measure decomposition rate in soil. Decomposition (the breakdown of organic material into its smaller constituents) is an important process for the release of nutrients into soil for plants to use. Gaining a better understanding of decomposition in soil will be of great value to gardeners in the UK.

PhD student Sarah Duddigan from Reading University will be giving a short talk about her research and findings during our Spring Show this year! She has been working on a collaborative project between the University of Reading and the Royal Horticultural Society (RHS) investigating the effects of adding organic matter (i.e. compost) to garden soils.

Sharing the best in Gardening

Come along and hear about her fascinating research!
